The Vowels sign is always written when it commences a word; also the first vowel is written in words that begin with a consonant. The writing of all other vowels is optional. The Dot which precedes each sign indicates the point at which to commence writing it. The sign for I is a hook in any direction, used, as in the consonant list; it yields 2 signs. In the second sign the vowel precedes the I and its place but not its quality may thus be indicated. The words underlined are those which do not commence with the letters or vowel sounds, against which they are placed. All signs may be made thin or thick according to the hand of the writer. All uncontracted parts of words are written by joining together the Alphabetical characters.
